LAND DIFFICULT TO REACH.

Arctic Expeditions About the Only Visitors Who Risk a Voyage to Greenland.

"No private vessel plies between Greenland and the rest of the world, either with passengers or cargo," writes Roger Peacock. "Of the Dundee whalers very few remain and if they happen to take fresh water on the Greenland coast, their stay is limited—a matter of hours. Ten years ago some fishing schooners of Gloucester, Mass., frequented the Greenland banks, but after a couple of seasons found that the halibut catch was not to be relied on. In 1894 the Miranda, an American steamer, attempted a cruise with tourists, but was wrecked at the gate of the first harbor she tried to leave. She foundered at sea, but one of the fishing schooners brought her people home.

"Apart from arctic expeditions no other foreign visitors have risked a voyage for about two centuries. The whaling ships are handled by experienced men, yet the Vega was shipped recently, her people barely escaping. For arctic expeditions one ship lost in each 20 measures the scale of risk. Fog, ice packs, bergs, currents and death-trap reefs bar out all casual shipping on pain of death.

"There also exists an excellent international treaty, whereby most Europeans and Americans are absolutely forbidden to enter Greenland. This treaty is enforced by Denmark on behalf of her royal trade, a government department, which is trying to save and civilize the native tribes of the country. By this means alone can the Eskimo people be shielded from disease, from alcohol and from interference with the hunting on which they depend for existence."

Father Knew His Ways.

Tommy—Ain't yer goin' to cane me today, teacher?
Teacher—No. Why should I?
"Because if I go home and show no signs of bein' caned, father'll think I've been playin' truant!"—Stray Stories.

Passing of the Cane.

Fashion takes odd twists, and you may have noticed the decadence of the walking-stick. It was in the fashion about four and twenty centuries ago, when the man who appeared in the streets of Athens without a stick was liable to be run in as a disorderly person.—London Chronicle.

Vinita has the limit in opera houses. The barn-like frame shack doing duty as a place of amusement leaks at every rain. Even John Griffith wouldn't put on Macbeth there this week. ## A Severe Cold For Three Months.

The following letter from A. S. Nusbaum, of Batesville, Ind. tells its own story. "I suffered for three months with a severe cold.
